The wrestling matches, which were only mediocre anyway, took a decided back seat Auditorium where a big crowd of around 1500 fans cheered every movement of the night's featured personality, Jack Dempsey, who served as the main grappling bout between vitch.

Not for the record, we will dispose of the facts and figures connected with the threegrunt-and-growl skirmishes, and then return to the ex-heavyweight boxing champion. The main bout between the brunnin, 29-year-old Indian and "The Blind Blender" gave Dempsey quite a workout, as he admitted in the dressing room afterward.

At the outset, Kulakwitz started his unorthodox tactic of eye-gouging and punching, but this type of activity proved his downfall. Dempsey wouldn't stand for it very long, and found it necessary to "mastery up" Kulakwitz with two jarring right elbows to the jaw of the pushy-faced Pole. In the meantime, the Eagle also had become wound up at the rough treatment handed out to him, and showered Henry with a barrage of rights. He then pounced on his gory opponent and won the fall with a body press in 12 minutes.

The second fall found Kulakwitz resuming his "no fair" tactics. After nine minutes of this, and continual threats by the "Manassa Mauler," he was disqualified by Dempsey and the Eagle was declared the winner in two straight falls. A few seconds before the end the Indian, wrenching his right knee in a leap from the ropes, and late last night was seen to be limping noticeably.

The semi-final. In a real clean match throughout, Frank Judson of Boston turned back Al Tucker, Jewish boy from New York, in two of the three falls. Tucker came out on top in the first 16 minutes with three bouts and a body press. The scores were

Plans California Trip to See Three Children; Has Trouble With Clothes

(SPECIAL TO THE DAILY NEWS)

In an exclusive interview with the old "Manassa Mauler," Jack Dempsey, in the dressing rooms of the Memorial Auditorium last night by a Daily News newspaperman, it was learned that the once-great fighter intends to enter the "candy" field as soon as conditions warrant.

"Since I've been out of the service only a day, I'm rather unaccustomed to what to do. But I have received some good proposals, the best of which is in the candy business, which I think I'll accept." Whether it was in the manufacturing end, the fellow would not commit himself.

"Yes, I know," he said, "but conditions are not very good at the present time. But as soon as the market becomes available, I'll be there pitching available, but not with these old-fashioned ideas.

He had completed his tour of duty in connection with the Victory Bond campaign when discharged from the U.S. Coast Guard Monday.

Following a brief tour of personal appearances on the East Coast, Dempsey said he would proceed to California for a stay with his three children who are now being cared for by a governess. "I am looking forward to see them as soon as possible," the off-duty veteran replied.

"Of course, I don't intend advancing into business too fast due to the uncertain of things throughout the country today, but I must take time to make inquiries and decisions," he asserted.

When questioned about his present business interests in New York City which consists of the famous Dempsey Restaurant across the street from the Hotel Astor, he replied, "I do have the lease of the premises, but I don't consider it business as far as I'm concerned."

In an interview after the interview, Dempsey departed from the dressing room in the presence of the manager, Max Waxman, and headed for the Hotel Astor to dispose of his fare e.g., and accompanying Dempsey in the party were Jimmy Ferguson, noted Montreal Daily Star sports writer, and Charles Gormish, Boston Garden publicist.
